They are Repeating the "Mistakes of Iraq" in Khurasan

Since the early stages of jihad in Sham, some leaders of factions started repeating, everywhere, that they do not want the "mistakes of Iraq" to be repeated, referring to the events that took place during jihad against the Crusaders in Iraq. They told their followers and supporters that they studied that previous stage well, understood all the experiences of the factions and groups, realized the points of strength and weakness within it and specified, in a wise and knowledgeable way, what of the mujahidin deeds went well to redo and what went wrong to avoid. Then, during the last decade, the events revealed that what they meant is rejecting the establishment of an Islamic State in Sham, and calling to revive the creeds of the defunct Sahawat factions of Iraq. They hide the fact that the true "mistakes of Iraq" are the crimes committed by the Sahawat murtaddin that weakened the mujahidin and resulted in the termination of the murtadd factions.

The plan of forming the Sahawat in Iraq, which caused most of the "mistakes of Iraq", was based on many factors. Most importantly, misleading the factions by making them believe that victory was achieved and the war ended against the Americans, whose goal was to preserve some of their interest during the period after their withdrawal and not to have Iraq become a second Afghanistan in which mujahidin can find safe haven to plan to strike America again.

Therefore, fake negotiations took place inside the prisons with the leaders of factions, during which the Americans promised them to accept their participation in the ruling of the country after their withdrawal from it. Also, they promised their support to reduce the dominant Iranian influence and protect them and their followers from any future legal consequences by issuing a "general pardon" to them and include them in government jobs and in the army and security agencies. But first, they had to eliminate the mujahidin, who started at the time to prepare for the stage following the American withdrawal by gathering under the umbrella of the "Mujahidin Shura Council", laying the groundwork for the establishment of the "Islamic State of Iraq". Such an elimination was a fantasy that ran across the minds of the leaders of factions, and this is what the Crusaders relied on in their negotiations with them.

Those miserable losers, who kept repeating their claim of possessing wisdom, knowledge and expertise, and kept accusing the mujahidin of being immature while in reality they were immatures, did not realize that the Crusaders were aiming to destroy them while seeking to destroy the Islamic State, which would exhaust them in the war and bleed all their energy during their attempts to eliminate it. Then, their power will break and their effectiveness will be limited in the field, after they pave the way for the Rafida and other allies of the Crusaders to rule Iraq after the withdrawal of the American military from it. That is exactly what happened. These are the most important "mistakes of Iraq" which the Sahawat murtaddin, everywhere, are hiding from their followers.

Thus, fighters from the murtadd factions appeared suddenly next to American tanks on the outskirts of Baghdad to help them find the mujahidin, raid their houses, and arrest them and kill them on their behalf. They started to wear yellow belts to be distinguished by airplanes that cover their movements, which are coordinated with the Crusaders. Likewise, the Islamic State mujahidin started to harvest heads of the Sahawat leaders and kill their murtadd alliances, until their finished them all and only few of them survived to become targets to the Rafida for elimination and capture, because of the bad history they had with them. By Allah's grace, nothing remains of those factions in Iraq except for their murtadd leaders who sought refuge in the neighboring countries, for their taghut masters to pay them their retirements after they completed their mission, which is the destruction of the jihad of the people of Iraq or at least seeking to achieve that.

After we saw the "mistakes of Iraq" committed again, but this time by the murtaddin of the Sahawat of Sham, as they weakened their strength and allowed the Nusayri regime to regain its strength, we see that the same "mistakes of Iraq" are repeated today in Khurasan by the Taliban murtaddin. It is as if there is not a wise man among them to warn them about the unfortunate fate that awaits them if they follow the footsteps of those before them, those murtaddin who relied on the Crusaders and allied with them in their fight against Muslims.

America announces in the ongoing secret and public negotiations with the Taliban murtaddin in Doha, Moscow and elsewhere, that they seek to secure their interests in Afghanistan after their withdrawal. Most importantly is making sure that Afghanistan will not become a safe haven for the mujahidin to plan and prepare for attacks against the Crusaders and murtaddin. It also declares its concern that the Islamic State will take control over the entire country once the American forces leave, similar to what happened in Iraq. All that is part of a plan aiming to prevent the Taliban from fighting them and their allies in the murtadd government, and to redirect their fighters in all fronts to fight the Islamic State in the areas under its control, to put them to battle alongside the murtadd Afghan army and under Crusader coalition aerial cover.

The constant repetition of the "mistakes of Iraq" by the Taliban murtaddin will lead them, by Allah's permission, to a similar fate of the Sahawat of Iraq. By Allah's permission, their war against the Islamic State will bleed them, without their being able to defeat the Islamic State, and whatever remains of their weak power can be eliminated or contained by the allies of America. Such is how the Americans plot: to weaken the Taliban to a level at which they cannot dominate the Afghan government, which the negotiating parties today want it to participate in. Meanwhile, these parties will preserve the strength of the government and not exhaust it in the destructive battles against the Islamic State. That planning is clear for all. However, the Taliban murtaddin are taking the bait without any vision or guidance. They will not wake up until they face their inevitable fate, when some of their leaders find their place next to their brothers, the leaders of the Iraqi Sahawat in the hotels of Doha, Amman and Istanbul. Then, many of them will enter in governing struggles to loot fortunes and employ their followers. Truly, whoever Allah guides none can misguide, and whoever He allows to fall astray, none can guide them aright. All praise is due to Allah, Lord of all creation.
